Norman Jolley Collection

Norman Jolley (1916-2002) began his career as an actor, with small roles in 1940s westerns. He also acted on radio and later on television. Jolley played the evil Agent X in some episodes of the TV series Space Patrol, but when the producer asked him to contribute scripts, the character was retired and as the chief writer Jolley used his engineering background to create credible storylines. Eventually he also wrote for other TV series and in 1956 he formed Bartlett-Jolley Productions with ex-actor Dick Bartlett (who directed the scripts Jolley would write, with both men producing), which went on to produce eight pictures for Universal-International by 1958.

This collection consists of over 300 TV scripts (often including several drafts) and two movie scripts.
